Mediamatic is hosting an immersive 3-week festival around Japanese knotweed, which will recur the coming 3 years. The Japanese knotweed is a fast-growing plant which, in Europe, is known for its destructive and intrusive characteristics. Under European regulations, invasive exotic species are allowed to be radically eradicated. The City of Amsterdam, for example, is allocating 8 million euros to destroy Japanese knotweed, hoping to prevent further damage to building foundations, pavements and the vegetation. However, what many do not know is that this species has a multitude of positive attributes ranging from its delicious taste and medicinal properties to its potential for being the base of biomaterials. The Japanese Knotweed Festival investigates how, in collaboration with various creators, we can contribute to a way of living together in harmony with this contested plant.

We raise awareness of the positive aspects of Japanese Knotweed and promote its cultivation as a sustainable and valuable resource. Through exhibitions, workshops and tastings attendees will discover the unique textures, flavours, and possibilities of this remarkable plant. Also, we will focus on the importance of safe harvesting and processing of the plant.

Symposium

For the opening weekend of the festival, Mediamatic has arranged a 2-day symposium in which experts and creatives from multiple disciplinary fields will discuss all things Japanese knotweed.

In this symposium on the 14th and 15th of April Raphael Ediphier, Niek Kosten & Kristof Vrancken, Sebastjan Kovač & Danica Sretenović, Yoshinari Nishiki, Gaja Mežnarić Osole, Norbert Peeter and Debra Solomon among others will be sharing their knowledge and ideas with us.

Exhibitions

The Japanese Knotweed Festival holds a series of exhibitions dissecting the aesthetic qualities of the plant and displaying its possible value in society. We would like to introduce you to the world of Japanese knotweed through photographic storytelling, various installations and interactive exhibitions.

Not In My Backyard! is an (incomplete) visual, physical and societal dissection of the (invasive alien) plant species by photographer Kristof Vrancken and graphic designer Niek Kosten. In this exhibition they investigate and dissect the position of the plant in its environment.

In the Invasive Energy Harvesting: EROI Drink exhibition, you can witness artifacts left behind by Japanese artist Yoshinari Nishiki who uses the Japanese Knotweed by turning it into EROI Drink (エロいドリンク). Nishiki has prepared ingredients for the Amsterdam edition of EROI Drink, allowing the audience to bottle their own energy drinks within the exhibition space.

The Dog Chased its Tail To Bite it Off is a mural exhibit by artist Alaa Abu Asad where he draws parallels between the violent, xenophobic speech used to describe the Japanese knotweed and the language often used to describe human migrants—a language that reveals the current human condition.

Meet Virgile Durando, artist in residence at Mediamatic, as he works on Japanese knotweed material creations in Weaving Japanese Knotweed. In an interactive and informative walk-in exhibition setting, he will transmit the knowledge he has gathered on how to use and manipulate the Japanese knotweed. Virgile also hosts Making With The Maker workshops to show and teach you how to weave Japanese knotweed.

Workshops

Mediamatic is hosting various workshops in which you can learn to identify and integrate this plant into your everyday life. The Japanese knotweed is an extraordinary plant, not only due to its aesthetic value but also for its functional uses. A myriad of hues can be extracted from its pigments and it can be used to make paper, musical instruments as well as delicious dishes.

In the Observational Drawing of Japanese Knotweed workshop, artist and trained biologist Annemarie Verschoor, will spotlight the Japanese knotweed. By observing and drawing the plant with a scientific overview, participants learn to recognise its physical properties.

Together with Lucie Havel, participants of the Foliage- and Rhizome Dye Workshop are able to dye the wool of Dutch sheep with different parts of the Japanese knotweed, a plant on which they graze. Several techniques will be scrutinised and used. With these you will develop a colour palette of five to fifteen colours during the workshops.

In the Paper Making Workshop by Lucie Havel and Marieke de Hoop, participants will make paper in different colours and textures made from the stems of Japanese knotweed.

During the Pan Flute Making Workshop you will learn to make your own instrument from dried knotweed stems. Guided by Marc Lemonnier, musician and forager specialised in natural percussion, you will craft a pan flute together and learn to play a song. Children and family members are encouraged to participate together in this family-oriented workshop.

The Mediamatic biotope houses Mediamatic ETEN, a plant-based restaurant and waterside bar. The restaurant is inspired by seasonal vegetables and local, sometimes homegrown ingredients, where research and conceptualising play an important role to create sensory experiences. With this underlying culinary basis, it is no surprise that knotweed will also find its way to our plates and glasses during the festival.

The Japanese knotweed can be a delicious ingredient to diversify your meals. Follow the Knotweed Cooking Show, hosted by Pauline Wiersema, and explore how you can collect ingredients and prepare dishes with this plant. The recipes will be shared on our website.

Japanese knotweed can't be sold for consumption in the European Union. Only the extract from its roots in its purest form, resveratrol, is traded on the international market. In collaboration with Krater, the festival's Knotweed Burek Exchange doesn't trade with money but with knowledge. Plant one of our Japanese Knotweed plant-signs in your local patch, share a photo and receive a Japanese knotweed burek in exchange.

Curated by Emile Corre, experimental brewer and innovative explorer of sustainable solutions, Brouwersberaad focuses on brewing as constructive system change. This first edition will look into the challenges of the drink industries by inviting some of its most radical local innovators. From brewing with invasive species like Japanese knotweed to removing water from drinks all together, we will look into some out of the box ideas to kick off this new series at Mediamatic.

Through combining elements like art, food, sound, a unique head spa experience and aromatic atmosphere, using Japanese knotweed essences, the EatArt Experience by Takako Hamano and Uno Fujisawa stimulates the five senses – seeing, hearing, tasting, touching, and smelling – in the serene setting of the greenhouses at Mediamatic.

During the 5th of May liberation celebration, Mediamatic will host a Liberation Day Lunch and Dinner developed by chefs Uno Fujisawa, Aslı Hatipoğlu and artist Alaa Abu Asad. It will use locally foraged Japanese knotweed as the key ingredient. Our freedom meal will be composed of an array of dishes that will be set on a communal dining table and initiate dialogue between the participants. The event will also include a performance from Alaa Abu Asad to moderate the dialogue of the meal.
